*The colour descriptions used are those given in the four Scales of Colour of the Golden Dawn Tradition. These 'are based on clairvoyant investigation, but experience shows them to vary somewhat from person to person. many astral colours have no correspondence in physical pigment -- the closet approximation being in coloured light...." (G. Knight, A Practical Guide to Qabalistic Symbolism p.226). These colours also were adopted by the Servants of the Light (SOL) and used on their websites and affiliated websites.

 and  The hex codes for colours were initially taken from the Servants of the Light (SOL) website code for the version of the Tree found here: <http://www.servantsofthelight.org/QBL/Index.html>. The initial pointer to the SOL websafe TREE colours came via a thank you noted posted here: <http://www.lelandra.com/tarotbook/TreeofLifeColors.htm>. Likewise the graphics for various combination colours (e.g., 'white flecked gold,' etc) also are used with permission, courtesy of the SOL.

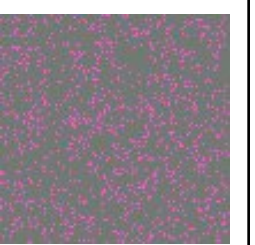

A degree of subjectivity entered into colour specification for the Sephiroth and the Paths, even with the excellent guidance from SOL. For instance, what really is the difference between the 'Deep Violet' of Chesed in Atziluth and the 'Violet Purple' of Hod in Atziluth. In that instance, the SOL site had specified the same colour code for both (660066), and I agreed. However, it's worth noting that some changes were made in the hex codes in the list below. In many cases, the SOL hex codes agreed with the colours I had available in Keynote for Mac, but not for all of them (e.g., FF82EE for 'Pure Violet'). Consequently, I substituted what seemed to me be the closest and best available colour, (e.g., CC33FF for 'Pure Violet'). Additionally, in some cases, I chose a hex code I thought worked better than the one specified. (e.g., 66CCFF for 'Pure soft blue' rather than '6666FF'). Even so, these colours are substantially the same, or close to the same as in the SOL Tree and are not a philosophical departure, as with the colours used by Wm. Grey/RJ Stewart or the Arum Solis. That would remain further grounds for investigation.
